(Rick Smith / CTV) News Date: December 11, 2013 Water from the Kootenay River running through the Moyie River channel located just west of Hope on the Alberta-BC border (background). The river flows under Highway 93 north of the town of Moyie Bridge. A fast-moving, burning, blizzarding, scorching, searing storm of sludge and sand — created by melting glaciers in the mountains above The Pas — has also been gaining steam in Alberta. It threatens to move faster than any storm to come through the area since about 1968, when a storm ripped through. By Friday morning, The Pas officials had measured up to 30 centimetres of sludge in the area. They said that was 30 times greater than normal levels, the only time this has happened in recent years. The waters also carry some high-energy sand; officials said the sand is 60 times the natural background levels. And when the wind blows, it shoots huge sand particles into the air. And, like lightning, the wind seems to pick up and speed as the storm approaches. The winds typically rise to 70 kilometres per hour at the height of the storm in the evening, and are blowing even faster earlier in the day. As it's moved into Alberta, the storm has already caused the evacuation of 12 people, including a man with an amput
