When the Bears drafted Hicks in the first round, they were banking on the talent he showed in the Senior Bowl and the NFL Combine to be enough to convince him to jump to the NFL after a year in the Canadian Football League. While Hicks performed well enough during the NFL combine and pro day, that wasn't the case in the Senior Bowl. In fact, he'd have to make a big impression on the Bears staff for them to even consider him in the first place. And he did just that. Akiem Hicks got a call from the Bears at the Senior Bowl. But was it for an offer or a very important question? pic.twitter.com/lGrVbcZUff — Dan Wiederer (@danwiederer) April 10, 2017 Hicks sat down with Bears defensive coordinator Vic Fangio and head coach John Fox for an interview. As ESPN's Dan Wiederer points out, it was the kind of call that got you to play in the NFL. As he put it, "Hicks got a call from the Bears at the Senior Bowl. But was it for an offer or a very important question?" Fangio and Fox, along with the rest of the Bears coaching staff, were so impressed with Hicks' performance in Mobile that they made the trip up to Halas Hall to meet him. If that didn't work, they were also able to make a trip to Nashville, Tennessee for his Pro Day and run him through their drills with the team. What the Bears got for a future first round draft pick was a confident, sure-footed, complete lineman who can bring a physical presence to the defensive line. Hicks himself called the 2017 draft class, and the position he and the Bears both call their own, "the best class ever." "This is the best class ever. I feel like we are all Super Bowl champs," Hicks said.
