Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi has ordered a voter registration campaign for the Dec. 12 referendum, which will likely be divisive, given that most Sunnis and the Kurds do not want to risk turmoil by leaving Iraq. The government has been trying to avoid a divisive vote since it was approved by a referendum commission in September. Kurdish leader Masoud Barzani demanded that the vote be delayed until after the election. "We cannot conduct a referendum on independence in a political vacuum," Barzani said. "It is a violation of the constitution, Iraq's founding charter and its legitimacy." But the Iraqi government is insisting on holding the vote. Kurds make up about 10 percent of Iraq's 32 million people, yet they have enjoyed broad autonomy since 1991 when the country was split into the semi-autonomous Kurdish north and the central government led by Baghdad. Iraqi Kurds control large parts of the oil-rich autonomous Kurdish region in northern Iraq. The autonomous region has an autonomous government, a currency, and maintains its own schools, media and courts. Barzani has said he wants to hold a referendum but not immediately. Iraqi officials have said they would try to prevent it but that such a vote would be legal. In September, Barzani's Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK) and the Kurdistan Democratic Party (KDP) both vowed to hold the referendum on their own if no agreement is reached by April. The two parties formed the referendum commission in September in a bid to end a 15-year standoff over the fate of the semiautonomous Kurdish region. 2d92ce491b
