The UK government has launched a planned crackdown on the country's vaping industry, implementing plans to limit and restrict vaping products as part of its Tobacco Control Plan 2019. The plan aims to reduce smoking rates by encouraging people to vape instead of toking. However, as Breitbart London has noted previously, there is no evidence that vaping is actually less harmful than cigarette smoking. The UK's independent public health agency, Public Health England, warned in the Tobacco Control Plan 2017 that there were “overwhelming health benefits” to vaping as a way to reduce smoking rates. It claimed that vaping “might lead to a reduction in smoking” and was “safer than smoking”. Although vaping is not entirely risk-free — some new products contain products like vitamin E acetate, which can explode with disastrous consequences — the group warned that it was “clear” that vaping “isn’t as harmful as smoking”, and advised that “we can’t be sure that vaping is wholly or even largely harmless”. Public Health England also argued that vaping was “likely to reduce the harmful effects of smoking for people who wish to quit smoking”. However, Public Health England’s own data on the number of smokers trying to quit based on e-cigarettes shows it has been failing for some time. According to the most recent official figures, the proportion of smokers attempting to quit entirely through e-cigarettes was just six per cent in 2016, and five per cent in 2017. This is in contrast to the 38 per cent of smokers who quit on their own, and who make up a majority of the 21 per cent of smokers who succeeded in quitting without e-cigarettes. This also means that five per cent of smokers who use e-cigarettes to try to quit are reporting “failed quit attempts”, with only one per cent reporting a “success” — and those who have never tried quitting smoking completely via vaping to begin with. In total, the switch to vaping has not only failed to reduce the number of smokers in the UK, but has failed to reduce the rate of tobacco-related deaths. In other words, the vaping industry is simply nothing more than a decoy for young people to get them hooked on nicotine and tobacco products. How is this possible? Public Health England admitted that the evidence base for the benefits of vaping are

Q: How can I get a check box or radio button to exist when the page loads so that the user knows it has checked a choice before submitting the form? I have an application that loads an xml feed on a page. I am using this to get a list of cars and making it a page on my site. The user gets to pick which car they want and if they choose this car (radio button) it will load that choice when the page loads as it needs to have a choice picked before the form is submitted. My question is, how can I add a checkbox or radio button that will be there when the page loads for them to select one of their choices? My form will submit with no predefined choices. I tried some sample codes I found but no luck. Thanks! A: Try this: (Edit: added onclick attribute)

---
