The country saw some of its worst flooding in a century. August alone saw more rain than is received in a year. And the flooding is expected to get worse. Corporations are stocking up on emergency supplies, and rushing to provide aid to the devastated communities. The aftermath of the floods in Pakistan is unfolding just as it did in Kerala in India. In the latest aerial pictures, we can see dozens of trucks, cars, and even busses piled up with people and aid supplies that are sitting outside of a compound in Pakistani town of Sialkot. The flooding in the area has been ongoing since last month and the local government has been trying to stop the water from entering the town. Thankfully, the rainfall seems to be tapering off, at least for now. Far from helping people cope with this shocking disaster, the Pakistani government is instead considering taking away water rationing. If it succeeds in bringing water back to the residents of Sialkot, it will be the latest sign of the gravity of the crisis in the region. Afghanistan's largest hospital was almost completely destroyed in a massive bomb attack that also killed 32 other people. It's shocking news that the Afghan capital witnessed such a deadly attack. An ambulance carrying wounded people was ambushed by gunmen when it was on its way to the medical center. The U.N. mission has said the attack was targeted at Afghans and foreigners. We learned from the Islamic State that they were making a propaganda video showing how they carried out this attack. They also showed how they shot people in the head with a long gun. While it has been a year since the Islamic State came to prominence in northern Iraq and Syria, they're still active and can make a big impact on the region. Just this week, they took control of the Syrian city of Palmyra. The location holds great historical significance and has long been a symbol of the Syrian government. The militants are expanding their reach and taking more land. Their vision is to create a large Islamic State in the Middle East.

Effects of maternal overnutrition during fetal life on the development of glucose tolerance in adult life in rats. Previous studies have shown that malnutrition during fetal life causes postnatal development of glucose intolerance. However, it is unknown whether a high carbohydrate diet during a long period of pregnancy affects glucose metabolism in the offspring. We examined the effect of maternal high-carbohydrate diet on the development of glucose intolerance in adult life in rats. Female Wistar rats (n 1cdb36666d

I tried both of the settings in below but neither worked. Setting 1: Setting 2:

With Setting 2 the content is still visible. Is there any way to completely remove the height from the middle of the page in a MobileFirst 8.0 Hybrid App? A: I have reproduced the height issue and this is by design. The documentation says that the divider-content and full-content-container classes will only apply when the header is set to fixed. If you use the following styling, then it works as expected: and then the divider class which will be used when the header is set to fixed, will change the layout: Breath There are various ways in which the human body can reveal its state of health, but breath is amongst the most significant ones. Apart from the fact that you will always notice when
