Q: Buggy svg width % based on resolution
So, I have a top-level container with a width of 100% and overflow-x: hidden, and inside that container a bunch of divs with width 1/3 of parent's width. I have this SVG image with a white left triangle, 3x3 red squares, and a blue bottom and top triangle. Width of all the squares is set to 33.333333%. Here is a fiddle: As you can see, the width of SVG is based on the value of window and browser, not on the width of parent. Is there a way to set it in code?
A: You need to set widths to percentages, not percents.
A: All percentages have to be calculated per percent of parent, not percents. Works fine here.

This app is really simple, easy to use, and effective. This works better than other apps that are $80, $100 or even more." - Aaron "This is something I've been waiting for. I'm already a member of the site, but I didn't know my password because I copied it and put it somewhere else. Now I have the option to enter my email and ask for a new password." - Bella "Takes the pain out of recovering Word docs. I needed something like this; it's exactly what I needed. I'm not sure what I was thinking when I accidentally put my Word password on a hard drive and then lost access to it." - Diane "I don't know what I was thinking. I was trying to save time while looking for something else. I've used a lot of different programs to try and recover my password. They've all worked, but none have worked as well as this." - Joey "I found the same app when I was looking to download it, and I liked it because of all the reviews. I searched again to see if they were really that high on this and they were, so I bought it. I put in my email and it's done. I'm impressed." - Jules
